Annual Report 2021

Peace Is Possible:

Toward a Nonviolent Future

Culture Night, NP Philippines, Nov 2021

Letter from the Executive Director

Dear Friend,

Hope. Dignity. Bravery. Trust. Resiliency. As the world entered the second year of a global pandemic, and we saw regional violence continue to grow, we all felt the need for more of these qualities in our lives and communities.

With your support, NP met that need in Iraq, Myanmar, the Philippines, Sudan, South Sudan, Thailand, and the United States. Because this is what Unarmed Civilian Protection (UCP) does. UCP isn't just practical tools or a method of our work—it is a paradigm shift. UCP is a world reimagined—one built on nonviolence and deep relationships based on care and equality.

As in South Sudan, where community members stopped revenge killings when NP created safe spaces for armed groups to talk, bringing hope and dignity to youth who often see no other options besides fighting like those before them. Or in the Philippines, where we ran workshops with female ex-combatants to be brave, find their voice, and trust themselves and one another. They are now seen as leaders for peace in their community. Or in New York City, where Asian American community members reeling from hate crimes were trained in self-protection techniques, strengthening their resiliency.

In 2022, we celebrate 20 years of NP together. That is 20 years of our circle of supporters—including you—growing larger and larger. That is 20 years of proving that peace is the pathway forward.

As we turn the page into next year, we know we must face new challenges together—to adapt to digital safety concerns, climate change, and growing inequality in our world. But in this moment, I am filled only with gratitude for you and all those who place hope and trust in our work. I know we can face these challenges together. You make peace possible every day. Thank you.

With deep gratitude,

TIFFANY EASTHOM
EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR, NONVIOLENT PEACEFORCE

In 2021,

You made transformations possible ...

In Iraq, protecting people in displacement camps and helping them return home safely.

In Myanmar, amidst the military takeover and COVID-19 surges, continuing to support women leaders working for community safety.

In the Philippines, supporting inclusive participation of youth, women, and indigenous peoples in the peace process.

In South Sudan, promoting peace dialogues and training women, youth, and communities in de-escalating conflicts.

In the U.S., providing direct protection at events, training communities, and reimagining safety in schools.

At the UN, ASEAN, EU, and U.S. Congress, increasing recognition and funding for Unarmed Civilian Protection.

*For 20 years,
NP has been on the ground protecting civilians and working side-by-side with local communities to

You made growth possible ...

We launched our Sudan program in Darfur, supporting local communities after the UN Peacekeepers left.

We've expanded our global reach building an online training program. In 2021, we trained 81 students from the Sahel.

You made protection possible ...

Reimagining Security: We work alongside communities to interrupt and prevent violence using UCP.

Transforming Communities: We expand access to life-saving, impactful peace strategies that are civilian-led.

Sustaining Peace: We enhance existing strengths so communities are equipped to protect themselves.

“ Let our youth go to school and not fight for us—let them fight for their futures.

AND ENGAGING YOUTH LEADERS

“ It is good to have such an objective to discuss. It gave us more information on how to solve issues related to violence in a peaceful way. ... Force is not always the best choice.

DIGNITY IS POSSIBLE

INCLUSIVE CEASEFIRES & PEACE PROCESSES

When NP's field team in North Cotabato, Mindanao, Philippines received information about rising tensions in a nearby village, they took to the road.

The team recalled how they "heard sporadic firing of guns and approximately 30 vehicles with families onboard, including children, caught in the middle of the road and unable to pass through."

"The day before, community members tipped us off that they spotted 100 armed men moving towards the village."

Well-known in the area, NP immediately jumped into action and accompanied the parade of vehicles, and the families inside them, to safety. No more gunfire was heard during the trip back home.

Not only did NP protect civilians from the crossfire, the team also continued to work after the fight by creating a safe space for negotiations to take place between the two groups.

And NP joined the ceasefire committee to deter further fighting. This is the deep peacekeeping work NP can do because of established relationships and credibility on the ground in conflict zones.

RESEARCH HIGHLIGHT

NP published a study on the role and participation of women in peace and security in Myanmar, Philippines, and Thailand.

The report is one of the trailblazing outputs of our first program that works across borders in Southeast Asia. The program enhances the capacity and participation of women-led, civil-society organizations and institutions in peace and security initiatives. Learning from each other is central to the work that we do.

Today, groups of women from Mindanao, Myanmar, and Southern Thailand have been able to exchange experiences and lessons. Together, they are increasing women's participation in peace processes and strengthening women's agency in peace and security.

ADVOCACY HIGHLIGHT

NP supports women leaders around the world to take steps toward sustainable peace.

Sunday Steven, one of NP's Protection Officers from South Sudan, was able to advocate for women, peace, and security at a high-level ministerial event attended by ambassadors, government workers, and UN peacekeepers.

Sunday lives in a displacement camp herself, and works closely with Women Protection Teams through trainings, coaching, and mentoring. "The issue bringing us together was peace and security for women—and I was honored to be there representing women at the grassroots level."

She shared her concerns and those of her neighbors at the event. For example, the lack of clean, sanitary facilities often leads women to go further distances alone in unsafe areas.

"My message to the organizers of the high-level ministerial event is that it should not end here," Sunday reflected. "Go to the grassroots level to see what is hindering women's participation and bringing insecurity to women, so that solutions can be found jointly and permanently."

BRAVERY IS POSSIBLE

WOMEN, PEACE & SECURITY

"I was born in conflict, grew up in conflict, lost my dear ones from conflict, continue to stay in conflict. I hope after this forum, my family and I will live the best life that we want. Let us together find the best way to end this conflict," reflected Unice, the Women Protection Team Chairlady from East Mundri, South Sudan.

Unice and 40 other leaders from her county had joined together for a breakthrough Peace Forum. They discussed ongoing security concerns—prolonged conflict between armed groups, inter-communal hatred, looting, limited freedom of movement, and sexual violence.

Not only did they create a space for local leaders to discuss these issues, the participants also discussed how their communities can move forward through forgiveness and reconciliation. The women mapped out how they can see an end to violence.

By the end of this forum, the women urged armed actors to stop violence against women and to resolve issues nonviolently. They demanded free movement of civilians and formed peace committees throughout the region.

Although it was dangerous for them to even travel to the forum, Unice and her fellow leaders were relieved at the chance to vocalize their pain and come together to discuss how they could work collectively to rebuild their communities and reconcile with the past.

“ On this day, you have opened our eyes as women of Jambo and after here we are going to organize ourselves.

Linda, South Sudan

“ NP opened our eyes and gave us the wings to fly. Now we are an active part of the decision-making process. We can easily voice the concerns haunting women.

TRUST IS POSSIBLE

SOCIAL COHESION

Ryn Miake-Lye is one of hundreds of New Yorkers you've supported in taking part in Community Safety Trainings.

"The safety training was empowering, and I thought, this is the future," Ryn reflects of the first time she joined an NP training.

Ryn is concerned about the skyrocketing rates of hate crimes against Asian American and Pacific Islander (AAPI) communities. She joined the training after learning about NP's work to create safety ambassadors and safe zones—a network of security for majority AAPI neighborhoods in the city.

“ If every community had access to an all-day training like that, it would change the dynamic. ”

"There are things I know in my mind and my heart, but until I did an in-person training, I didn't know what my vulnerabilities are."

And that is exactly what the trainings do: empower participants to see themselves as solution builders and find their own roles in protecting communities through consent and solidarity.

RESILIENCY IS POSSIBLE

PROTECTION IN HUMANITARIAN EMERGENCIES

Mary* wanted to take a dip in the floodwaters nearby to get some relief from the hot sun. When she went further into the water than the other children, she went under and did not come back up.

The news of yet another drowned child shook the community and devastated Mary's parent. But it was no shock. Every few weeks—sometimes multiple times a week—children drown in the floodwaters in and around Bentiu, South Sudan.

Recent years have brought increasingly destructive floods during the rainy season. One community down the road from Bentiu is now waterlocked because of the flooding. The waters, which are higher than many homes nearby, create many dangers besides drownings—sickness from the dirty water, dangerous animals lurking, or even heightened risk of sexual abuse and exploitation.

One way that NP responded was by training volunteers to operate a “child safe space” on the island. Giving children a fun, safe place to play can keep them away from dangerous waters.

The result? Zero child deaths from drowning since the space opened. No more families have to mourn the loss of their child the way Mary's did.

A Look to the Future

Innovation

We know that in order to make a more peaceful world, we must grow in understanding and application of nonviolent strategies. We have proven that unarmed approaches are effective in some of the most violent areas of the planet. That's why we're working to increase the impact of Unarmed Civilian Protection in interrupting cycles of violence fueled by climate disruption, digital technologies, and power and privilege.

NP's commitment to organizational innovation:

- Halving our carbon emissions by 2030
- Decolonizing our policies and practices
- Increasing our capacity to maximize the impact of our work

NP's Assessment Team in Ukraine (Tetiana Gaviuk) 2022

Expanding Our Reach

NP has entered an unprecedented stage of growth. In 2021, we worked together with the United Nations in Darfur to provide protection and prevent violence after the withdrawal of UN Peacekeepers. In Thailand, we provided digital accompaniment to people fleeing Myanmar and supported the development of new women's peacebuilding teams. And in the United States we are exploring new program sites in places such as Portland, Oregon and rural Minnesota. In the future, NP will continue to grow to meet the need for peace and protection around the world.

Advocating for Change

To enhance nonviolent responses to conflict, NP advocates at the local, national, and international levels to raise awareness and understanding on Unarmed Civilian Protection (UCP) strategies. For 3 years in a row, the U.S. Congress annual funding bill has included language advancing UCP. And at the UN, 27 policies, recommendations, and resolutions have recognized unarmed approaches for civilian protection. But a massive scale-up of UCP is needed. To enact change, NP will continue to promote the use of UCP and work to mobilize funding to match present needs.

Strengthening Nonviolence

Unarmed Civilian Protection (UCP) has gained recognition as a valuable method for protecting civilians. But as a relatively newly recognized practice, there is an urgent need to research, document, and evaluate the experiences of those implementing UCP strategies. Building on the founders' initial vision for NP, we spearheaded the Good Practices project to strengthen and grow the field of UCP by bringing together affected beneficiaries, practitioners, and scholars through in-person and virtual convenings. After conducting case studies and organizing regional workshops, in the coming years NP will assemble the first international UCP Good Practices Conference.
